

Summary

Preface

Brett L. Walker

Writing Japan at Nature's Edge: The Promises and Perils of Environmental History

Ian Jared Miller

Part I: Oceans and Empires

1. The Pelagic Empire: Reconsidering Japanese Expansion
2. William M. Tsutsui
3. From Meat to Machine Oil: The Nineteenth-Century Development of Whaling in Wakayama
4. Jakobina Arch

3. Fisheries Build Up the Nation: Maritime Environmental Encounters between Japan and China

Micah Muscolino

Part II: Changing Landscapes

4. Talking Sulfur Dioxide: Air Pollution and the Politics of Science in Late Meiji Japan
Takehiro Watanabe

5. Constructing Nature

Philip C. Brown

5. Toroku: Mountain Dreams, Chemical Nightmares
6. Timothy S. George

Part III: Between Bodies

7. Fecal Matters: Prolegomenon to a History of Shit in Japan
8. David L. Howell
9. Weathering Fuji: Marriage, Meteorology, and the Meiji Bodyscape
10. Andrew Bernstein

9. Animal Histories: Stranger in a Tokyo Canal

Christine L. Marran

Part IV: Vistas and Vantage Points

11. Inventorying Nature: Tokugawa Yoshimune and the Sponsorship of Honzōgaku in Eighteenth-Century Japan
12. Federico Marcon

11. Japanese Literature and Environmental Crises

Karen Thornber

12. Japanese Environmental Policy: Lessons from Experience and Remaining Problems — Ken'ichi Miyamoto

Part V: The Triple Disaster of

13. An Envirotechnical Disaster: Negotiating Nature, Technology, and Politics at Fukushima
Sara B. Pritchard

14. Postcrisis Japanese Nuclear Policy: From Top-down Directives to Bottom-up Activism

Daniel R. Aldrich

15. Using Japan to Think Globally: The Natural Subject of History and Its Hopes

Julia Adeney Thomas

List of Contributors

Index